Teaching and Social Justice: Lessons from a Pandemic

Vannina Sztainbok

Vannina Sztainbok is a Lecturer in the Department of Social Justice Education, OISE/UT and an affiliated faculty of CIDEC. Her research draws on anti-racist critical race theory, Black feminist thought, critical geography, and psychoanalysis to study racism and nation in South America. Other areas of research include the ethical implications of representations of violence, and embodiment and online learning.

In this presentation, I will focus on what I have learned working with students during the COVID-19 pandemic. I will not be providing a pedagogical workshop. Instead, I will focus on how this major global upheaval has revealed the ways that some students have always already been living in a state of emergency.
