Introduction

The Centre for Black Studies in Education (CBSE) in the Ontario Institute of Studies in Education (OISE), University of Toronto, was established on January 1, 2022. The CBSE exists primarily to harness the knowledge of Black scholars and address anti-blackness & inequities that impact Black people in all aspects of Canadian life including education.

The Centre for Black Studies in Education is also designed to:

1. Foster, strengthen, and value the Black studies research and pedagogical practices in education.
2. Provide for the production and advancement of Black scholarship in the areas of research and pedagogy, curriculum development.
3. Serve as a safe, accessible, and inclusive space for OISE Black professors and students; offers space for critical dialogue surrounding issues of race, racism, African Indigeneity, decolonization & more.
4. Facilitate collaboration with research programs, faculty members in other departments & community organizations to promote critical Black studies research and pedagogy.
5. Provide leadership and training on issues of anti-Black racism and equity training to influence issues of equity.

The Centre embraces a robust framework of education; teaching-learning in formal educational settings & non-formal settings, work/labour organizations, and community-based settings; and supports the theorization of practices grounded in African Indigenous, Afro-Caribbean, and Black Indigenous worldviews and ways of knowing.

OISE, U of T and the wider community offers a dynamic and intellectual space to engage in critical conversations and about Black Studies research/learning - not limited to the narratives, varying experiences and histories (heterogeneity) of Blackness in Canada, Continental Africa and the global Black diaspora.

The CBSE is located in Room 225 on the second floor of the OISE Building. Among some of the activities of the centre offers are scholarly paper development training and writing groups, seminars, guest lectures and an annual conference. In the future, we intend to develop a Journal of Black Studies in Education.

MESSAGE FROM THE DIRECTOR

ANDREW B. CAMPBELL (DR. ABC)

He / Him

Assistant Professor, Teaching Stream, Leadership for Racial Justice in Teacher Education

Co-Coordinator - Black Future Educators' Pathway (BFEP)

Email: ab.campbell@utoronto.ca

Website: <https://drabc.ca/>

I am honored to have led the Centre for Black Studies in Education (CBSE) in the role of Director since May 2024. This has been my first year—and what an incredible year it has been.

It has been both a privilege and a joy to lead the Centre at such a pivotal time. To curate programs and opportunities grounded in Black scholarship, Black excellence, joy, and community celebration is no small task—and I do not take it for granted.

The CBSE remains a vital space that uplifts, empowers, and supports Black students, scholars, educators, and community members—within and beyond the university.

Our work this year has been deeply rooted in the spirit of Ubuntu—“I am because we are.” This principle, championed by the Black Caucus, continues to guide our path. It is through collective presence, relationship, and shared purpose that we move forward.

You'll notice that our programming spans both inside and outside the university. That is intentional. We believe in disrupting traditional ideas about who gets to take up space in academic institutions—and how this work must remain connected to communities beyond their walls. Community is not an afterthought; it is foundational to everything we do.

As this report reflects, the 2024–2025 year has brought forward a range of dynamic, engaging programming. From speaker series and community panels to workshops and collaborative initiatives, the CBSE continues to be a hub of critical thought, cultural celebration, and transformative learning. We look forward to building on this momentum in the years ahead.

I extend my deepest gratitude to the past Directors whose leadership laid the foundation for this work: Dr. Amal Madibbo, Dr. Ann Lopez, Dr. Njoki Wane

Thank you as well to the members of the Black Caucus, who have poured into the Centre through their pedagogy, scholarship, mentorship, and enduring presence.

To my remarkable team—our volunteer committee, work-study students, graduate assistant, and administrative staff—thank you. Your dedication and passion make this work possible.

And finally, sincere thanks to the wider OISE community, including the leadership team, accounts department, facilities staff, CTL Chair, and the Master of Teaching program for your continued support of the Centre and its mission.
