

Inside OISE @ Home Edition

May 21, 2020

Welcome to Inside OISE @ Home Edition. This week's image features a picture of Convocation Hall. Be sure to check out the official convocation website for more details on this year's U of T virtual ceremony. Also, stay tuned for next week's special Inside OISE Graduation Celebration edition that will share details about how our community will acknowledge our graduates achievements!

Please continue to share your updates with us! We want to know what's happening with the OISE community. Be well and stay well.

Staff On The Move

IEN Staff Changes

Lindsay DuPré (left) will be returning from maternity leave to the role of Indigenous Education Liaison on June 15. Julie Blair (right) will be returning to her role as IEN Coordinator.

Thanks to Alexis Daybutch for helping out in the office over the last year.

Educational Resources

SAGE Research Methods

For anyone planning a research project, the OISE librarians recommend SAGE Research Methods, an online package with resources on research design and quantitative and qualitative research methods.

The SAGE Research Methods package includes videos, eBooks, definitions, case examples, practice datasets, and encyclopedia entries covering a wide range of quantitative and qualitative methods. It's an excellent resource for new and experienced researchers alike!

Lecture Recording Resources

Looking for a method to pre-record your lectures? TechSmith Snagit has replaced TechSmith Relay as U of T's new lecture capture software. The University of Toronto has licensed TechSmith Snagit as the institutional lecture recording solution to provide screen and audio recording. Resulting videos are saved locally on the computer where they were recorded and can be shared via streaming services such as U of T Libraries' MyMedia Links, to an external site or Office 365. TechSmith Snagit is available to faculty, staff and students with a valid UTORid.

OISE Stay At Home Club: Gauravi's Mumbai Kitchen!

Don't miss #OISEStayAtHomeClub on Twitter Live this Friday, May 22nd, with special guest Gauravi Lobo.

Gauravi, who is completing her Master of Education at OISE, was lucky to return to her home in India and spend time with family during the pandemic. Food is an important way for her to share and experience culture and, during this pandemic, she has the pleasure of cooking with family – which has led to a renewed appreciation for traditional yet adaptable recipes.

Gauravi will share a recipe in her session, with a simple message: When your favourite takeout might not be available, it's still possible to make a delicious dish. Tune in on Twitter, no account needed!
