All types of antisemitism research qualify for the award, including historical antisemitism, current antisemitism, antisemitism from the right, antisemitism from the left, religious-based antisemitism, secular antisemitism, general societal antisemitism, specifically academic antisemitism, antisemitism committed by communities with privilege, and antisemitism committed by other oppressed communities.

To qualify, research must be vested in a commitment to the rights and equality of all people, whether they be Jews or Palestinians, white people or people of colour. Intersectional analysis is welcome and indeed encouraged, though only insofar as it is not used to define out of existence or to trivialize the oppression to which all Jews are subject, whether they be white or of colour, rich or poor.
